

28 June 1984

CIA SHAKEUP

RATHER: In Washington, the Central Intelligence Agency is playing musical chairs with four top officials. All are connected in some way with the agency's controversial support of Nicaraguan contra rebels. Among the four reassigned in the major shake-up, head of the clandestine services, John *Stein, who becomes inspector general. His replacement is *Clair● George, formally the agency's chief Capitol Hill lobbyist. A CIA spokesman insists the job swaps are routine, and denies that they have anything to do with Central America. Other sources claim the shake-up is linked to recent setbacks for CIA backing of the contras.